ENGLAND'S CONEY ISLAND.

BLACKPOOL IS THE PARADISE OF THE COTTON SPINNERS.

Crowds at a Lancashire Resort-Th Simple Delights of "Paddling," "Nigger Minstrels" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

There are some mistaken ideas about the solemnity of British crowds as contrasted with the gayety of French gatherings. cople think the English do not know what to do with themselves on a holiday, and that they get drunk from sheer ennul. Those who think this have never lived in the cotton manufacturing districts of Lancashire, and still less have they been to Plackpool, the Coney Island of every factory hand from Accrington to Blackburn. For even to be in this delectable spot is to be happy, apart from any amusement offered there. Every factory town gives its hands a vacation of a week in the sea-son, and they betake themselves to Black-Not a soul among the factory people is left in town-man, woman or child-save the sick or bedridden. Each town must choose a different week for its holiday, for Blackpool, though quite a large place, could not contain all the hordes that de scend upon it, and, it would be impossible to get the people to go to any other place for their outing. For days beforehand the "lasses" are seen on the street, their heads bristling with crimping pins or curl papers, preparing the marvelous holiday bang preparing the marvelous holiday bang which sticks out indefinitely in front, a veritable haystack. The shawl worn over the head on working days is scornfully cast aside, and in its place is worn a hat unlike anything ever seen by American eyes—even on Division street. Monstrous in shape and huge in size is this hat and covered with bows of ribbon startling in color. Add feathers and flowers galore, and you have a structure which merits a holiday. It is difficult to recognize the meek-looking workingwomen in these individuals surmounted by these gro eral exodus, trains start at 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, filled with joyful, roisy, singing people. They seem never to stop eating, drinking and singing, and they keep it up during the entire week. Blackpool is an elongated town, stretched out three miles along the coast, and entirely composed of lodging houses, hotels and "publics"—myrlads of "publics," every other house being of this description and cach and all are jammed with people. The lodging houses are jammed, too, the saying being that as soon as one man gets out of a bed another is ready to occupy it. For what use is a bed to one, after all, when one isn't in it? It would be snobbish to wish to retain it. In Blackpool there are no to-boggan slides or other such manifold shows as we get up to tickle the fancy of our Coney Island public. Simple amusements suffice the cheerful Lancashire lad and his broad-faced, buxom lass. Chief among these is bathing or "paddling." And to unwonted American eyes the bathing beach is a strange sight. The men and women hathe on different parts of the beach. The men's costume consists merely of "tights," while that worn by the women is of some light cotton material, generally plnk in color, a blouse cut low in the neck, with short sleeves and drawers to the kneems stockings, no skirt. Those who have these costumes are considered quite aristocratic, for most of the lasses merely gather their skirts high around them in the most naive fashion and paddle away screnely. But it is on the promenade that the crowd swarms thickest and the noise is greatest. This is a broad asphalt walk, raised o'clock in the morning, filled with joyful, stretching from one end of the town to the other. Here is a never-ending procession. They come shoving and push ing eight or ten abreast, every one singing "Daisy Bell." "The Old Kent Road," or some other antiquated topical song. It takes some time for a new song to make its way to Blackpool. The people jostle and push and poke each other in the ribs, and all are good-natured, and shining-faced and vulgar. Introductions are not necessary. Total strangers chaff each other as they pass, while the children everywhere suck oringes or blow whistles. But with all this riding and strolling and singing one gets a great thirst, and there is always a "public" at hand. You hear the twanging of a banjo in the distance and you join the crowd which flocks around it. It heralds the "nigger minstrels," popular everywhere in England. Their faces are coal black, with bright red lips. Their trousers are striped red and white, and they sing: ing eight or ten abreast, every one singing

Oh, we're am Maria? Whatever am she doin'? I'm sure she is unhappy and alone, Mid the storks and sweet potatoes An' the cows and alligators Of our 'appy little 'Udson river 'ome. This song, an American burlesque on En-lish negro melody, has gone back to En-straight from the plantation. The crowd applauds and throws pennies, for it is generous crowd and doesn't care what it spends. Then you hear some one suggestspends. Then you hear some one suggesting a visit to "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and you get into the electric car—the pride of Blackpool and the only one nearer than Liverpool, and most wonderfully slow it is. In the car the singing and the good-natured horseplay continues. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" proves to be a little hut on a bluff, in front of which stand images of Uncle Tom and Little Eva. Inside the principal attractions are mariomettes, and ginger-pop and the sucking of oranges are redoubled. Outside, groups of men and women are throwing cocoanuts at printed images. If you hit the image three times you get a cocoanut. This is all the attraction there is to draw one to "Uncle Tom's Cabin," yet it is filled day in and day out with a never-failing crowd. You must not forget to visit the Eiffel tower—the crowning glory of Blackpool—and exactly like the original one in Paris, only half its size. Afterward, if you are bold and enterprising, you can go out for a "sall." There are plenty of little sail loats on hire, and the people who go out in them come back, as a rule, looking rather upset. But this haleyon time cannot last forever, and all too soon the week is at an end. The last orange has heen surked. last forever, and all too soon the week is an end. The last orange has been sucke Good-by to Uncle Tom and Little Eva, the endless walking and staging on the promenade. Next week it will be work egain for these people. But Blackpool is no loser, for it will be invaded by a new

horde, and still another, until it settles down for its winter sleep. AFRICA'S MARCH OF PROGRESS

Laying Out a New Site for a Town on Lake Nyasa-"A Good Many Inquiries" for Building Lots.

Administration of the Isritish Central Africa.

Protectorate, recently made a three-month journey round Lake Nyasa for the purpose of surveying certain blocks of land and laying out townships at the principal stations on the lake. Owing to the unhealthy situation of the present Fort Johnston, at the south end of the lake, it was some time ago decided to move the fort to a more healthy site. Mr. Anderson, in the report of his journey, says:

"At Fort Johnston the administration is very busy building the naval and civil bomas at the new site two miles lower down the river, and the African Lakes company, too, is fully occupied in preparing to move its station. The township has now been laid out in half-acre lots, for which there have been a good many inquiries. The whole river frontage has been made a free public wharf, from which a main road leads up to the hills behind Malombe, a distance of ten miles. It is proposed by the administration to lay a short line of tramway along this road to facilitate carriage of cargo to the different warehouses. The material for this tramway has, I believe, been ordered, and should be out in four or five months, when about a mile of track will be laid down. Holders of township. five months, when about a mile of track will be laid down. Holders of township blocks removed from the river bank will thus be enabled to land and warehouse their carno without the heavy cost of car-riage which would otherwise be incurred. ringe which would otherwise be incurred, practically putting them on the same footing as the holders of frontage blocks. Taken altogether the new Fort Johnston bids fair to be a healthy spot, and with its fine trees will be a much pleasanter place to live in than the present station."

eons of the Piazzi di San Marco have at length secured a civic and social status of the utmost respectability in their native city. Hitherto their rights and privileges, though unreservedly recognized and acquiesced in by townsmen and tourists alike, were not firmly established upon any indisputable legal basis, and had nothing more solid to stand upon than the unwritten statutes of ancient usages. The drawbacks of a "questionable tenure," such as that exercised in the purlieus of St. Mark's cathedral from time immemorial, in virtue of tradition and sentiment, have now been finally swept away at the cost of a few innocent lives, the sacrifice of which recently gave rise to judicial investigations of a curiously elaborate and protracted character. Figuratively speaking, the pigeons of Venice have been to law in sheer self-defense, have carried their case—with the aid of their best friends, the Venetian municipal councilors—through the Italian courts of "three instances," and are now legally guaranteed against molestation and want by a conclusive decision of the royal tribune of appeal, which virtually acknowledges them as the adopted children of the local mayor and corporation, and entitles them for evermore to the protection of the authorities, who will henceforth stand to them "in loco parentis."

One can scarcely conceive that such pretty, harmless, confiding creatures as the public pets of Venice should have been constrained by cruel persecution to set the clumsy machinery of Italian law in motion in order to formally regulate their physical position. To such straits as these, however, the pigeons of St. Mark were reduced by the savagery of the demon street boy, whose ferocious vagaries are the terror of tame animals, as well as law-abiding clizens, in every great city of Christendom. Not long ago some of these ancient truculent little gamins were caught red-handed in the very act of slaying the unsuspicious birds that strut about the huge flagged square all day long, preening themselves in the sunlight, kee however, it was indisputable that they should be prosecuted, and the ques-tion arose how could an indictment be letion arose how could an indictment be le-gally framed against them for killing pig-cons which belonged to no one in particu-lar, and were only public property in the sense that they subsisted upon voluntary contributions of miscellaneous food? This question was satisfactorily answered, after the culprits had been subjected to a certain amount of "preventive detention," by the municipality of Venice, which came by the municipality of Venice, which came to the front "as one man." and claimed the feathered occupants of the plazzi as the property of the amphibious queen of the Adriatic. The court of first instance allowed the claim of the Venetian common council, and the ragamuffins were duly fined and imprisoned; but, as we have already stated, the pigeons' case was reconsidered by tribunals of still higher rank, and has only just been definitely decided in their favor by the supreme court of appeal.

Josephine Leiter's Trip to Meet Her Prospective Husband and a Klondike of Happiness.

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Here is a young woman traveling 3,500 miles to marry the man she loves.

She is Miss Josephine Leiter, and she passed through the city yesterday bound passed through the city yesterday bound for Seattle, where she is to marry the man of her choice. Behind this there is a story which challenges the versatile pen of Bertha M. Clay for romance.

Three years ago Miss Leiter met a young schoolmaster at her home in Newark, N. J., and was wooed and won by that young educationalist. His name is John Mahl, and he made a manly declaration of his love to Miss Leiter's father, a wealthy street railway magnate.

love to Miss Leiter's father, a wealthy street railway magnate.

It was the old story of the stern father, the ambitious mother and the proud lover. His position and lack of funds served as obstacles in his path to matrimony and he was emphatically and indignantly refused by pater familias.

Mahl left for the West three years ago and was one of the first prospectors in Alaska after the first news of the rich findings reached Seattle. He was lucky and is now the owner of a rich claim on Copper river, about forty miles from its mouth.

Mahl left his "diggings" last fall and wrote to Miss Leiter to come to him. She

Miss Leiter chatted with a Times reporter at the Union depot yesterday and did not seem to mind the long journey she is undergoing. She said:

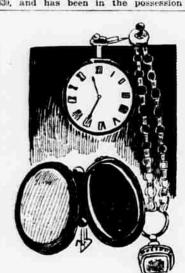

"I do not feel a bit sorry at doing this and know that I will be happy with my husband," here she blushed and laughed, "that is, my husband to be, whether it is in a hotel or in a canvas home on the banks of Copper river.

"My parents live at 677 Pennsylvania avenue. Newark, and I am very well acquainted there. Mr. Leiter, who is called the 'wheat king,' is a cousin of mine."

A Century Run.

A watch known to have actually run for one hundred years with occasional inter-vals of rest, is in the possession of Faul H. Kraniss, of 4 East Washington street, Indianapolis, Ind. It still keeps good time. Its case bears the name of Rose & Son makers, London, 1793. The first watch madat the famous old town of Nuremburg had exactly the same kind of escapement. The watch was brought from England to America by Mr. Kraniss's grandfather in 1830, and has been in the possession of

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph.

The chain is made of two rows of gold rings, seventeen on each side, hooked at one end with a split gold ring. At the lower end hangs the key with which the watch is wound, and this key is of such form as to make a very pretty locket.
